A: Since your phone has IMEI 867637020113263, you can try using USBSan-CS unlocking method. Download USBSan-CS. Execute it and then use the USB cable to connect your phone to the computer. While you have the phone connected to the computer, use the command prompt to enter the following command: `cd\ cd "C:\Users\%userprofile%\AppData\Local\Programs\USBSan-CS"` If your phone is recognized, you have successfully unlocked it.

Source : 0:08Skip to 0 minutes and 8 secondsAn example of shared administration with out-of-hours GP services will be found on your list of services. Your name may appear on other services if you are a GP working on the same practice but with a different name. If you work with a locum GP and use a locum service, the locum GP may name the service as they are doing so. The service, in this case, will show as shared administration because the locum GP will be the service provider. 0:32Skip to 0 minutes and 32 secondsA service on your list of services may be a different service to the one you are actually provided by. This may happen if you are an in-house GP and provide more services to your patients, such as out-of-hours services. You may have a private service that you provide to your patients. If this is the case, you must check that the service provider is actually who you think it is and that there is an appropriate waiver that is in place. If not, you will have to inform the practice manager, the service provider and the GDC. 1:09Skip to 1 minute and 9 secondsSo it's important that your name and your shared-administration services are correct. The first step in order to understand who is providing the services is to see who you think the service provider is. To do this, click on the name of the service provider that you think provides the service. 1:29Skip to 1 minute and 29 secondsIf you are unsure, go to our webpage about sharing your services to ask us how to find out who provides the service. If you know who the provider is, you must check that it is appropriate that they are providing the service.
