Silibinin, an extract from the seeds of milk thistle (Silybum marianum), is known as a potent inhibitor of cytochrome P450 system. In the present study, the effects of silibinin on antigen-antibody reaction, which was assumed to be induced by release of prostaglandins (PGs) and leukotrienes (LTs), were investigated using a peritoneal exudate cell assay. Silibinin, at concentrations of 1 microM and higher, suppressed PGE2 and LTB4 synthesis in antigen-antibody-induced cells in a dose-dependent fashion. In contrast, the suppressive effect on 13-cis-retinoic acid formation induced by antigen-antibody reaction was not observed even at the concentration of 100 microM. In addition, cyclooxygenase activity, as assessed by arachidonic acid-induced PGE2 formation, and leukotriene-synthesizing activity, as assessed by [<sup>3</sup>H]LTC4 synthesis, were also inhibited in the antigen-antibody reaction. In conclusion, the present results suggest that silibinin has an inhibitory effect on biosynthesis of PGs and LTs in antigen-antibody-induced cells, probably through inhibition of cyclooxygenase activity and/or LT-synthetizing activity.--- id: version-0.16-navigation title: Navigation sidebar_label: Navigation original_id: navigation --- Controls and lists that contain multiple sibling content items can group the items into a navigation.
