Australia's High Court has ruled that Facebook cannot publish nude photos taken by a former user of a dating website that it owns. The photos were posted on the user's Facebook profile without the permission of the dating website's owner and included an image of the person's face. The person in question later changed their Facebook settings to hide the photos from being publicly available. Facebook removed the image but told the person that the images were still public to its friends and other users. It can now do that, but the court ruled that this is a breach of the company's agreement with the dating website. The 21-year-old person in question filed a civil lawsuit against Facebook, and the case is ongoing. In a 4-3 majority vote, the court said that "the online sharing medium does not itself determine the right of privacy of someone's image," and that Facebook has infringed upon that right.
