Just because they're a game of annihilation doesn't mean they don't have redeeming qualities. Panzer Elite Action: Fields of Glory has an occasional chance at scenario building and strategic thinking. Should you care to read their reports. Panzer Elite Action: Fields of Glory very nearly out-stinks the actual Panzer Elite:. I'm not sure what your basis for saying the designers "care". They're just a group of angry gamers who have learned a few dirty words. Not much of a way to create outstanding or even good games. Here's just one quick example: According to one of the reviewers, it's a good idea to build a shield next to your colonists to escape the wrath of the enemy. The designer has no concept of how the world works, so I can guarantee this not only won't work, but it'll hurt your colonists. Another reviewer made the same exact point; you can be certain it didn't occur to him. He doesn't care that it won't work; he just doesn't care. And yet the reviewer continues. Here's another. In one of the levels, the designer has made a scout who moves backwards as the enemy approaches. In the review, the reviewer says. "Hey look, a good idea." The reviewer is very observant indeed. Still another reviewer, a bit closer to the designers, says: 0:15 You'll have a helper ICT for those who want a more savage approach. It won't be good, but it'll beat the other systems. The ultimate insult came from a reviewer: There's more, much more. Read the reviews on this one for yourself. And then he continues on to the next game. He's never going to play them, because he's never going to care. Please feel free to create positive reviews. It can't hurt. It'll help. Last but certainly not least, we have the review. This one is slightly more balanced, but this reviewer also sounds like he doesn't care. And yet, this reviewer continues. He even quotes an interview with the designers! So, my message to 3da54e8ca3
