Most laptops are vulnerable to screen lockups that prevent the screen from turning on, even if the computer is plugged in and turned on. If you're looking for a tool that offers a solution to this problem and that doesn't cost a lot of money, we have just the tool you are looking for: SleepyWolf. SleepyWolf uses a combination of system tools to automatically power off the computer or lock the screen when the computer is left alone for a certain amount of time. It then activates the screen backlight in the event that the computer is unplugged or powered off. Obviously, SleepyWolf requires that you manually turn off the computer before its usefulness comes into play, and this can only be done after you've unplugged the computer from its power source. The software can be used by anyone regardless of their level of technical expertise. Its interface is simple and doesn't require any type of manual operation or configuration. The software also allows you to specify a specific schedule for the screen to turn on and off and to configure the settings to suit your needs, including the brightness of the screen, the delay for a screen lockup to happen and how long SleepyWolf should wait after a screen lockup before the screen comes back on. SleepyWolf has no configuration settings so you won't have to worry about making any changes. The software also doesn't have any pre-requisites other than your computer being in sleep mode and turned on. The tool runs silently in the background and its interface allows you to go about your daily tasks without worrying that you may have your screen locked up by an accidental touch of the mouse. SleepyWolf does not bring any noticeable impact on the computer and it doesn't cause any slow downs. If your computer happens to fall asleep more often than usual, it will just take a few minutes to set the computer back in sleep mode, and then there will be no slowdown. In addition, SleepyWolf allows you to configure the time it should take between a screen lockup and the screen coming back on. If you decide to set SleepyWolf to a small time period, you will get a screen lockup every time that you leave the computer unattended.
