In the related art, a nitride semiconductor is formed of a nitride crystal formed of a compound of at least one of gallium, aluminum, indium, and nitrogen (which will be referred to as GaN, AlN, InN, and the like) and is used for a light emitting device or a power device. A nitride semiconductor is preferably formed of an aluminum gallium nitride (AlGaN) crystal. In the past, in a semiconductor device formed of a nitride semiconductor, a nitride semiconductor layer formed of GaN or the like is formed over a substrate formed of a hetero substrate formed of silicon carbide (SiC), gallium nitride (GaN), or the like. The substrate is used in order to grow the nitride semiconductor layer. In the past, a nitride semiconductor substrate has been obtained by stacking and dissociating a nitride semiconductor formed of GaN or the like. However, a conventional nitride semiconductor substrate has a problem in that the substrate is expensive and the substrate has a defect. For example, in a nitride semiconductor substrate, a defect exists in a region formed of a high-density nitrogen. When an n-type electrode is formed on the nitride semiconductor substrate, a high-resistance
