Directed by Vishal Bhardwaj, the story revolves around the life and crimes of real-life gangsters Dawood Ibrahim and his nephew Chhota Shakeel, and their rivalry with the rising gangsters of the 1980s Mumbai. The movie was filmed on location in Mumbai, Nagpur and Coimbatore. The Indian Government named the film production to the list of potential national security threats in the country on the basis of the threat posed by Dawood Ibrahim's gang to the government.[1] It was released in India on October 30, 2012. The film was released on 25 January 2013 in the United Kingdom, by Eros International UK. It is the first Hindi film to be released in the UK after the Bombay High Court banned scenes related to Muslim community.[2] The film was awarded the President's Medal for Best Feature Film in Cinema Division of the Indian National Film Awards 2013.[3] Contents The film story takes place in the backdrop of the Indian mafia in Mumbai around the 1980s. The film is based on the story of Dawood Ibrahim and the British journalist Iana Dayan, who was murdered in London in 1984 by members of the underworld. Dawood was subsequently granted asylum in India. In an interview, Kashyap said, "It was one of the most astonishing stories I've ever read, and I'm a big fan of people like Walter Mosely and Joe McGinnis, and of course Robert Ford and Liam Cunningham. Whenever I come across a human being like that on the world stage, and in that particular instance in Dawood's case, that person deserves admiration." [4] Anurag Kashyap and co-writer Zeishan Quadri had started writing the film script in 2007. After they completed a rough draft, in 2008, Bhardwaj and Kashyap met and agreed that the screenplay should be commissioned for a period of five to six months. The duo wrote the draft in around eight months. As a part of the research, the duo
