Blood samples were obtained weekly for 6 wk from 8 pregnant does and from 9 nonpregnant goats in an attempt to obtain longitudinal profiles of growth hormone (GH) and thyroxine (T4) during the different stages of pregnancy. The serum concentrations of both hormones declined during the initial 2 wk of pregnancy. GH then rose significantly from wk 3 to wk 8, peaking at 12.5 micrograms/L in wk 8. The concentrations of serum T4 in all goats were significantly lower in wk 8 than in nonpregnant controls. These results indicate that there is increased secretion of GH during late gestation which coincides with a drop in the circulating concentrations of T4 in the sheep and goats. { "dependencies": { "Microsoft.NETCore.UniversalWindowsPlatform": "5.1.0", "Microsoft.UI.Xaml": "1.1.31" }, "frameworks": { "uap10.0": {} }, "runtimes": { "win10-x86": {}, "win10-x86-aot": {}, "win10-x64": {}, "win10-x64-aot": {} } } Hepatitis A: the school nurse's role. Hepatitis A, a vaccine-preventable disease, is a cause of acute hepatitis in many parts of the world. In the United States, it is most common among children and young adults living in cities, the homeless, and in adolescents with other risk factors. It is rarely fatal, but there is widespread morbidity in those who become ill. With the development of a vaccine and the introduction of hepatitis A immunoglobulin, routine vaccination of adolescents and adults, particularly those at risk, is recommended. Anisotropic interactions from bulk to thin film: the importance of atomistic description of the substrate. We have investigated the atomistic origin of strong anisotropic interactions at the interface between a metal and a monolayer of a polymer using a model system consisting of a silver slab and a (NH₂)₂PdMe₂ backbone attached via ethylene glycol linkers. A hybrid density functional theory (DFT) density functional tight binding (DFTB) and ab initio method, MP2 and CCSD(T), was used to calculate the binding energy, elastic properties, and structural properties. Our results show that the average binding energy ($\Delta E(b)$) over the slab-top is about 1.0 eV smaller than the average binding energy ($\Delta E(b)$) over the substrate-top. In contrast, the average binding energy ($\Delta E(b)$) over the substrate-bottom is about 0.4 eV larger than that over the substrate-top. While the average binding energies ($\Delta E(b)$) of two types of bonds, Ag-N bonds and Pd-O bonds, from the DFTB and MP2 calculations are almost the same, the energy distribution for each bond with respect to the average level is significantly different from each other. The strong anisotropic interaction over the substrate-bottom is closely related to the variation in the effective local environment around the bottom layer. This could not be explained by the classical double-well potential.

Inga nea Inga nea, common names shorting dogwood, New York dogwood, apple-leafed dogwood and hairy dogwood, is a species of flowering plant native to eastern North America. Description Inga nea is a deciduous, shrub-like plant growing to tall, with spreading branches up to long. The alternate leaves are oblanceolate with a few sharp teeth along the edge, long and broad. The flowers are produced in large clusters of white or cream, long and broad with pink, purplish or purple petals. Taxonomy Inga nea was first 3e33713323
