Powerful and fancy Photoshop is a huge program with a massive arsenal of tools. You can fly through an image in Photoshop much faster than you can in most other image-editing software. We recommend using Photoshop to manipulate images for use in print and other types of media. This book covers Photoshop CS6, but most of the tools and techniques are still the same in earlier versions. Although Photoshop is expensive, it's worth it for the speed and the precision you can get with it. However, some functions that are easy to perform in other software are trickier in Photoshop. And Photoshop is notoriously slow to start up and run. The program offers a large library of built-in presets that give you a lot of help setting things up the way you want them. Check out Book III, Chapter 2 for more on presets and setting up presets the first time you use an image in Photoshop. Table 2-2 lists some of the buttons and tools available in Photoshop. Table 2-2 Photoshop's Most Valuable Tools

Tool	Function
--- ---	Nudge Repositions objects within the image frame. The tool is found in the top-left corner of the screen when it's active.
Zoom	Extends an image so it fills the display (or minimizes it to an icon). Most of the time, you want to use the keyboard shortcut, + or + +.
Magnify	Zooming in on an image so you can see something at a low level magnification.
F-x-it	Places a selection box around a specific area of an image.

Q: How to redirect to "manage.py runserver" with a URL? I have a module that allows you to access this URL: I want to redirect to runserver in a Django app when the user access that URL. I tried changing the response.status_code and all that for the views and urls.py and it just doesn't want to work and it says it doesn't redirect. A: The given answer is correct. I know what you are talking about but I had not read it before. I am re-posting for those who have gone through the same question. Using @user3460218 answer. Firstly, We need to add the following line to urls.py from django.views.generic import redirect and then we need to use this function to redirect: redirect(reverse("your_app.views.your_view_name"),) I tested it and it worked. A: Redirecting URL is a very common use case for Django. The redirect function (from django.views.generic) already does the job. I think you want to create a reverse view, so the user will be redirected to "manage.py runserver". You can add an url to your urls.py to achieve that. A: from django.views.generic import redirect from django.shortcuts import render def view(request): if request.method == 'GET': return redirect(reverse('your_app.views.redirect_to_view')) So, I'll redirect to a view which will redirect the user back to "manage.py runserver". The problem is that I don't know if the firewall will block the app. I have tried to install the app using a computer running Windows 7, but that did not work. I have tried to install the app using an earlier version of Android (2.2.1), and that
