Category:Nyingma tantrasYou know how they used to say you couldn’t judge a book by its cover? You’d have to read its inside first. Well, that’s a double standard, because the cover of the cover is only the book’s inside. Image via Kim K You may not be familiar with the story of “Countdown to Christmas,” but you’ll be familiar with the cover. Kim Kardashian and Kanye West’s daughter, North, was born on Christmas Day, and the cover of the newest “Countdown” book simply shows a photo of her and pops off to reveal the text. If you buy the book, the cover becomes the inside. If you don’t, a photo of the cover becomes the inside. You can judge both, but not the reason you were drawn to one over the other. In a new interview with E! News, Kardashian explained that the family chose that cover because they think it matches North’s personality — and North’s personality is “light-hearted.” “Her smile is contagious and we thought it was the perfect representation of her,” she said. On the one hand, the cover is selling a product, and her approval is a necessary salesperson in that role. On the other, it’s also an attempt to show something, and that something can mean different things to different people. Some people simply like shiny objects, while others might like the idea of the message that the cover gets across. I guess it’s like the famous question “What do you like in your coffee?” The answer to the question, of course, depends on the person asking. (And the question is stupid, but that’s another story.) Kardashian also tried to soften the situation by explaining that the whole thing is just for fun: “I’m not making fun of anybody’s baby. I’m just trying to market a book — people take things personally.” (Yes, I know she meant “baby,” but the joke was so pun-tastic that we can’t ignore it.) The Daily Dot has reached out to Kardashian and West’s publicist for clarification on whether or not this is normal practice for any of their products. 648931e174
